Artist Patty Gray demonstrating
Combing at Pacific Artglass in Gardena, CA

The Artist

Patty Gray was introduced to glass blowing in 1973. She and her husband built their first glass-blowing studio in 1975. Together they have been producing architectural fused / cast glasswork for installations in major hotels, public buildings, and private residences for over ten years. Patty is constantly on the road sharing her knowledge of fusing in workshops all over the world. To see more of Patty's work visit:

Combing

Combing is a technique used to distort patterns in molten glass for interesting effects. Typically a tile is made of fused, varied-color strips of glass and heated to a point where it is soft enough to "comb" with stainless steel rods. The piece can then be blown into a vessel using a process called "a pick up" like the piece shown here. For more information on combing visit:

The Kiln

The GM22CS commonly referred to as "The Clamshell" is particularly well suited for combing because of its easy access design and the fact that a tilt switch cuts the power to the elements whenever the lid is opened to prevent electrical shock. GRANT GARMETZ

A Young Artist Finding His Way to Glass

by Colleen Bryan

Grant Garmezzy blows high-end realistic glass sculpture with distinctly Southern imagery from a furnace at The Glass Spot in Richmond, Virginia. His work features the animal life of the rural South, where the artist grew up surrounded by nature and animals and the rhythms of farm life. He transfers techniques learned from realist Southern sculptors. The young artist is gaining a reputation in places as far distant as the Czech Republic, Turkey, South Korea, and Southern France.

Garmezzy's story is one of a young artist making his way through various media and recounting the challenges he navigated to establish himself as a professional glass artist. Glass Art caught up with Garmezzy just as he returned from teaching his first class in advanced sculpting at The Studio of The Corning Museum of Glass and readying himself for an intensive summer of international travel, demonstrations, and teaching.

The Artist's Roots

Garmezzy grew up on a farm outside Nashville, Tennessee, with parents who were very supportive of him pursuing art. "Nothing else came naturally to me, so I was enrolled at age 10 in private lessons with a cartoonist to practice drawing, and that naturally evolved. I apprenticed with a coppersmith in high school, where I learned how to work with metals, the discipline of being an artist, and the hardships of being a working artist. My early portfolio is filled with metalwork."

Out of high school, Garmezzy applied to 10 art schools and was accepted by nine. An accidental encounter with a recruiter in an elevator led him to discover Virginia Commonwealth University School of the Arts (VCUarts). "I found an amazing school, far enough away from home, with the best art facilities I'd seen and among the top arts programs in the country. They also had lots to offer beyond arts, and I wanted to be immersed in a diverse school."

Garmezzy entered VCUarts intending to specialize in metalworking. He studied ceramics, furniture design, and metalworking for a year but was fascinated when he first observed glassblowing. "There were music, students working in teams with molten material, people having a good time. I was, like, how do I get in there? I asked the head of the department for an override slip and changed my focus from metalsmithing to glassblowing."

The artist's introduction to glass was hardly a love match. Instruction focused on the basics, the mechanics, and the functional side of blowing. "I wasn't drawn to functional glassblowing at all. I didn't enjoy the rigid steps just to yield an end product that was a cup—something that has already been made much better than I could ever make it. That was unexciting, when this material could be so much more. I was impatient to move beyond simple functional items."

Working across Materials

That summer Garmezy returned home to apprentice with bronze sculptor Alan LeQuire, who made the Athena Parthenos sculpture in Nashville's Parthenon. LeQuire taught Garmezy how to coax figures from the material. "I returned to the glass program ready to apply all that I'd learned about clay sculpting to glass. I couldn't put my hands on the material, so the challenge was to make the tools become my hands."

He began to tweak what he learned in class—for example, making a bowl in order to transform the functional object into representational art, perhaps a turtle shell. Emilio Santini, a fifth-generation Murano glassworker, was the lampworking professor at VCUarts, and Garmezy sought his advice on glass sculpting using lampworking techniques. Garmezy applied those tips in the hot shop and began sculpting animals. He grew more adept at bringing life out of furnace glass. "I found that the material can look like anything—reptile skin, wood, stone, fish scales. As I gained control over a sizable vocabulary of textures in glass, my work bloomed."

Transitioning to a New Context

Garmezy graduated from VCUarts in 2007 and was immediately awarded the Northlands Creative Glass Residency on the far northern coast of Scotland for eight weeks. "Having received a gift of sculpting tools as a graduation present, I spent the residency blowing glass bubbles and sculpting them from the inside."

On completion of his residency, the Royal Scottish Academy awarded Garmezy the Benno Schotz award for most promising young sculptor in the United Kingdom. "I returned to the United States on a total high."

Back home in Richmond, Garmezy rented time at The Glass Spot, a local studio. He felt himself going through the motions of making work, though nothing great. "I remember it as a fun time, unrealistic just off the high of graduation and residency." Slowly, he started to build a team of fellow artists.

After a year of moving through the routines, Garmezy came to the sobering realization that he was stuck, having invested time in glassblowing without accruing any selling experience, artistic recognition, or body of work. "It all came to a head in 2008 and 2009 with the economic crash. For about three years I worked part-time at Home Depot to make enough money to rent time in the studio."

Moving past this dry period took more than simply waiting for the economy to improve. Garmezy had to figure out how to turn glassblowing into a livelihood. One key challenge was taking control of his own artistic future. A pivotal decision, Garmezy now reflects, was setting himself a goal to grow his business 1 percent every day. "Doing that could be something as small as writing an e-mail or sketching out ideas. My belief was that by the end of a year, I would be 365 percent better than I was the year before."

In real terms, Garmezy's goal translated to making the kind of glass he wanted to make, applying for residencies and teaching gigs, and creating a new easier-to-access website that focused on the viewer rather than the artist. He searched out prospective mentors—artists who had accomplished what he was attempting. "I started reaching out to the community, using old connections to help discover new ones. Having never before done any self-promotion, I started reading and learning more about entrepreneurship." He learned one key thing from this era: "I had to become less self-conscious of what people might say or think about me."

Adopting the model of 1 percent a day was a game changer for Garmezy. "That was the point where I stopped waiting for the piece of mail, news of a sale, or for a particular client to see and like my work. I stopped putting my future as an artist in the hands of other people and started taking charge of it myself."

With this orientation, the artist also recognized the importance of keeping balance in his life over the long haul. He structures every day to incorporate a healthy workout, something that moves his career forward, some time with friends and family, and feeding his soul. Hard-won advice to other young artists includes, "Keep the balance, stay the course, and avoid the distraction of shiny objects that keep you from pursuing your passion. Hard times usually lead to success if you just hang on to get past the immediate hurdle."

Anchoring in Community

Garmezy emphasizes that artistic success is not an overnight phenomenon. "I'm 31, and a lot of people see what I've accomplished as quick success. But it has taken me 10 years to get where I am now. That was 10 years of practice with a lot more failures than achievements, but I kept chiseling away a little every day."

Particularly with a long goal, a deep and supportive community provides an important anchor. The glassmaking community in Richmond is small. The Glass Spot, owned by Chris Skibbe, is the only hot shop in the area beyond the one at VCUarts and provides a nucleus of activity and community for glass artists. That is a resource Garmezy values highly.

As a young artist, Garmezy says his best decision was surrounding himself with people who loved him and supported his dream. Several members of the seven-person team have been around for eight years now. "We've worked for a long time and have come a long way together. Having this supportive inner circle from Day One has been essential."

Reaching Across Barriers

When Skibbe began staging Third Thursdays at the hot shop with a free, open-to-the-public demonstration of glassblowing, public interest in the performance of the medium exploded. "The public was elated." Third Thursdays helped Garmezy connect with Jerrod Ferguson of the J Ferguson Gallery, who gave the artist his first show in New York in 2013. From there the artist reached out to demonstrate and teach.

Garmezy was invited to lecture at the Korea National University of Arts (K-Arts) and Namseoul University. "I fell even more deeply in love with glass as a language, since it provided a common vernacular for reaching across verbal and cultural barriers. I always tell people that glassblowing is like dancing. If you can salsa and I can salsa, we can probably salsa together."

Following his Korean adventures, Garmezy was asked to be a visiting artist at the Chrysler Museum of Art in Norfolk, Virginia, during its Third Thursdays After Hours series. "It was an incredible night. I had invited my parents and my girlfriend's parents. We created a giant sea turtle in front of a crowd of hundreds, and when the piece was finished, I proposed to my now wife, Erin."

Demoing a lifesize pelican at Ignite Glass Studio Chicago.

Approach to Teaching

In February 2016, Garmezy taught his first class in advanced sculpting at The Studio of The Corning Museum of Glass. "I am not a smooth glassblower like the Venetian glassmakers. Watch them work and you see very straight backs and elbows. I do very high-end glass sculpting but engage the material in a way that might make people uncomfortable. My style is very raw."

For Garmezy, sculpting is all about feeling the material rather than moving through a sequential process. This sculpting style dictates a highly personalized teaching style. He stands beside the students while placing his hand alongside theirs on the tweezers, guiding their hands to create a jawbone sculpture. "They quickly learn the subtle moves that bring them success."

During the summer of 2016, Garmezy taught at The Glass Furnace outside Istanbul, Turkey, followed by a stint at Cesty Skla Glass Center in Prague, the Czech Republic. He was also invited to be part of an international glass festival in Southern France. "It is a small town on the coast near Barcelona that hosts an annual international glass festival, the Festival du Verre à Palau Del Vidre. I was one of two Americans among 10 artists visiting from around the world, demonstrating for five days. It was a busy summer." GA

Scholarly Electronic Resources at Corning The Techniques of Renaissance Venetian Glassworking

by The Staff of The Corning Museum of Glass

On February 1, 2016, The Corning Museum of Glass released its first-ever scholarly electronic resource, The Techniques of Renaissance Venetian Glassworking by artist and scholar, William Gudenrath. A culmination of a lifetime of research, this digital resource details the techniques used to make glass on Murano, the historic glassmaking island near Venice, between AD 1500 and 1700, a period known as “the golden age of Venetian glass.” Through 360-degree photography and high-definition video, complete reconstructions of Venetian glassmaking techniques unknown for centuries have now been revealed.

Exploring the Pinnacle of Glassblowing

It is a widely held belief that Venetian techniques represent the pinnacle of difficulty in glassblowing. Studio glass artists have long studied Venetian glassblowing methods in an effort to develop and refine their skills, even if their work bears no relation to Venetian glass of any period. Not well known, however, is how Venetian objects of the Renaissance were made, since the Venetian government carefully kept secret the processes behind the technically confounding glass coming out of Murano.

“With the publication of this work, The Corning Museum of Glass has enabled lovers of Renaissance Venetian glass, wherever they reside or whatever their level of interest, to appreciate this material more deeply through the technical observations the work contains,” said Karol Wight, president and executive director of The Corning Museum of Glass. “Bill’s years of research and celebrated teaching methods come together in this electronic resource, an engaging and exciting way to further our mission to tell the world about glass.”

Devotion to the Study of Historical Glasswork

Gudenrath is a glassblower, scholar, lecturer, teacher, and resident advisor at The Studio of The Corning Museum of Glass. He has devoted decades to the careful study of historical glassworking methods, with a strong emphasis on Venetian glass objects of the 16th through the 18th centuries, spending countless hours at his own glassblowing furnace attempting to recreate telling features noted in original objects.

“This is my investigation into the probable working practices of some of the most skilled artisans of all time—the glassblowers of Renaissance Venice,” said Gudenrath, who presents more than 40 narrated demonstration videos in the electronic resource, illustrating the re-creation of 25 “key objects” in The Corning Museum of Glass collection, as well as 10 additional techniques. “With no detailed contemporaneous descriptions of the maestros’ working methods, the objects alone must tell the story of how they were made.”

Gudenrath has been teaching classes in Venetian glassmaking techniques to eager students at The Studio of The Corning Museum of Glass for many years. During 2016—the 20th anniversary of The Studio, which he and his wife, Amy Schwartz, started in 1996—he’s excited to share this new resource with his students. I envision this resource being a big help in teaching both the fundamentals and extremely advanced procedures to the many dedicated students of glassblowing in the Venetian style,” said Gudenrath. The artist-teacher will present a lecture-video demo based on this electronic resource at this year’s Glass Art Society (GAS) conference, which will be held June 9–11, 2016, in Corning, New York.

Providing a Broad Access to Important Resources

As part of an ongoing effort to make the collection more digitally accessible, The Corning Museum of Glass chose to release The Techniques of Renaissance Venetian Glassworking as a free electronic resource. It is full of rich content meant to inform the research of scholars, inspire artists, and captivate the curious public. “Scholars of glass reside around the world, as do the collections of Venetian glass,” said Scott Sayre, chief digital officer of The Corning Museum of Glass. “We want to make this knowledge available to the broadest possible audience by making it an easily accessed digital resource.”

This project was realized through funding from the Kress Foundation and was a cross-team effort between Gudenrath and the Museum’s Studio, publications department, A/V team, photography and registration teams, and the digital media team.

Ovation-1213 interior:

Figured at cost per cubic foot, this is one of our lowest priced glass kilns. Imagine how many pendants you could fire.

Announcing the massive Paragon Ovation-1213 glass kiln

The Ovation-1213 is Paragon's newest glass kiln. Figured at cost per cubic foot, it is one of our lowest priced glass kilns.

28" x 40 1/2" x 13 1/4" interior

If you have been firing a smaller kiln, you will be amazed at the space inside the Ovation-1213. Fire several large projects such as bowls or platters in one load.

The Ovation-1213 interior is 40 1/2" wide, 13 1/4" high, and 28" deep and includes a heating element in the lid and sidewalls for superb heat distribution.

Lift the lid effortlessly

The kiln is rugged, reliable, and designed to last. Dual spring-assisted lid supports transfer the weight of the lid to a massive hinge assembly on the back of the kiln. This reduces the stress on the kiln wall resulting in the long life that Paragon kilns are famous for.

Mercury relay, 3" firebricks

A mercury relay, standard on the Ovation-1213, far out-lasts mechanical relays. (The digital controller turns the heat on or off through relays.)

The firebrick walls, lid and bottom are 3" thick, offering more insulation than the standard 2 1/2" firebrick. Watch the glass through two peepholes as it turns bright orange. Or order the optional 2" x 2" glass windows.

Pinless element grooves, digital controller

The Ovation-1213 uses pinless element grooves. The long sections of wall are cemented for strength.

The advanced digital Sentry 2.0 12-key controller is standard on the Ovation-1213.

The 2016 Contemporary Glass Society Exhibition

by Pam Reekie

London Glassblowing, known for its extensive use of color, is excited to be hosting the 2016 Contemporary Glass Society (CGS) exhibition, Black to White & Back Again. The selected glass art will be on display from September 16 through October 8, 2016.

For this juried exhibition, CGS members were challenged to strip away all color and work in monotoes in response to this unusual brief. Over 160 CGS members from across the world took up the challenge and made some extraordinary submissions. The selection process was extremely challenging and took hours of discussion before 55 artists were chosen for the show. Exhibitors are predominantly from Britain, but also selected were artists from Canada, Estonia, France, Ireland, Israel, New Zealand, and Spain. It will truly be an international show.

David Reekie, Casual Bystanders IX.

A Stellar Collection of Entries

The selection panel members were delighted to see several new CGS members and artists shine so brightly. CGS Chair Julia Stephenson shared: "I am sorry to use a cliché, but the standard was incredibly high across the board. CGS is going from strength to strength as a result of the quality of work created by our members. I was really proud to represent our organization on the selection panel. The final selection is international, the work uses wide-ranging techniques and approaches, and the subject matter is hugely diverse. The artists represented range from acknowledged master to recent graduates."

Peter Layton of London Glassblowing, the hosting gallery, stated: "I am thrilled that there was such an exciting and varied submission with a great deal of first-class work that deserved a place. Sadly, we did have to limit the number, and it became very hard to decide what to exclude. In the event, we accepted more than originally planned. This is going to be an excellent and unusual show, and I am very much looking forward to seeing it in our gallery."

Selected Artists

It is the vision of CGS that all glass artists reach their artistic potential and that the public and collectors have the opportunity to give them the recognition they deserve. The organization aims to encourage experimentation, debate, refinement of skills, and excellence at all levels.

In keeping with that vision and goal, CGS is pleased to announce that the 2016 exhibition will include work by: Philippa Beveridge, Catherine Brown, Effie Burns, Nicholas Collins, Robin Crawford, Róisín De Buitléar, James Devereux, Montserrat Duran Muntadas, Helen Eastham, Fiaz Elson, Hanne Enemark & Louis Thompson, Dominic Fondé, Stephen Foster, Harvey Goodall, Ashraf Hanna, Joseph Harrington, Louise Hawkins, Stewart Hearn, Catherine Hough, Katherine Huskie, Angela Jarman, Julie Johnson, Amber King, Alison Kinnaird M.B.E., Jon Lewis, Alison Lowry, Bruce Marks, James Maskrey, Elizabeth McClure, Laura McKinley, Kira Meyer, Linda Morley, Keiko Mukaide, Tracy Nicholls, Yoshiko Okada, Jochen Ott, Alexander Pearce, Jade Pinnell, Tim Rawlinson, David Reekie, Liam Reeves, Colin Reid, Mare Saare, Anthony Scala & Cathryn Shilling, Boris Shpeizman, Paul Stopler, Nancy Sutcliffe, Angela Thwaites, Jean-Simon Trottier, Elliot Walker, Clare Wilson, and Emma Woffenden & Jeff Zimmer.

Attendees from all over the world came to take part in some of the 250-plus classes offered by renowned artist-instructors who are experts in their respective fields. The show floor provides an additional highlight to the event with everything from the latest types and colors of glass to the most innovative kilns, plus many tools and specialty items.

The Gallery of Excellence juried art competition was once again sponsored by Glass Art and sister publications Glass Patterns Quarterly and The Flow. The panel of judges selected first, second, and third place winners from the entries, and there was also an opportunity for attendees to cast a vote for the People's Choice Award. As always, the entries for the professional and amateur categories as well as those from local high school students astounded viewers with their beauty and the skills demonstrated by the artwork. All of the winning entries can be viewed by visiting the "Gallery of Excellence" link at www.glasscraftexpo.com.

Time to Get Creative

by Mark Veit

So much has changed in the art glass world since the last edition of Glass Art. If you haven't kept up on the climate of glass manufacturing in America, I urge you to comb through social media and Google for more information. Without rehashing the who, what, where, and when, I would just like to say that I am cautiously optimistic that we will be back to business as usual in the near future.

Pulling Together

Recent agreements between the glass manufacturers and the Portland, Oregon, government look to be a step in the right direction. I am hopeful that both sides consider themselves winners when all is said and done. The environment will benefit from a more cleanly produced product, and the glass art world will continue to have the availability of beautiful glass.

I would like to thank the entire glass art community for making your voices heard through social media, telegrams, and public meetings these past months. Paul Tarlow of fusedglass.org was instrumental in getting the ball rolling with his telegram campaign as well as the hashtags #savecoloredglass and #glassheals. These hashtags have spawned stories from glass artists around the world—stories of how important colored glass is, not only for its aesthetic beauty but also for its ability to heal and connect people.

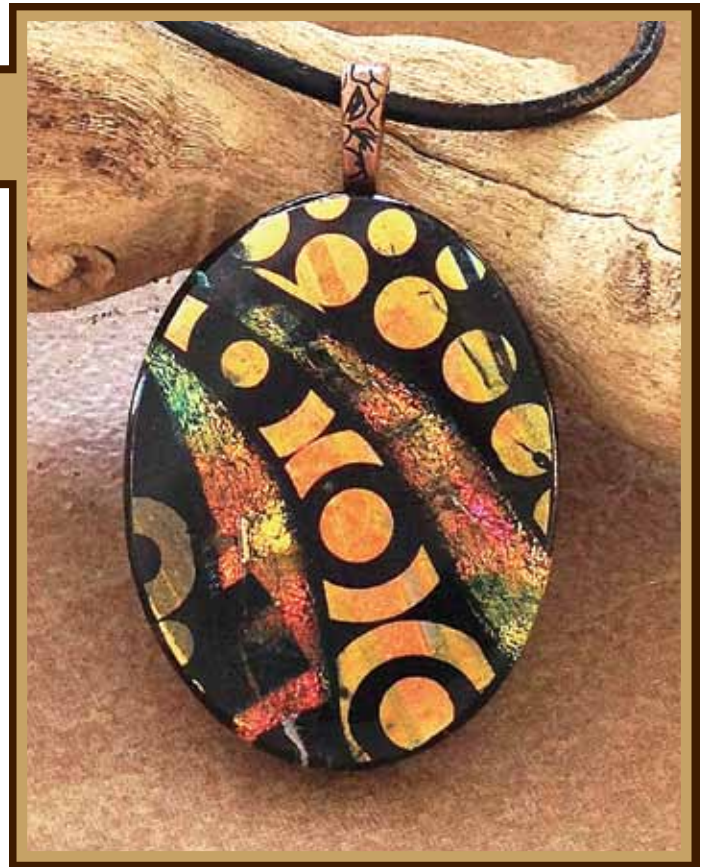

The Healing Aspects of Glass Art

While the marketing articles in this column are usually geared toward helping you promote yourself and your business, my eyes have been opened to a whole other side of glass art that is focused on healing and connecting people. I have seen stories of people using glass art to help recover from serious illness or depression. Some retirement homes encourage glass art as a way to keep people involved and giving back to the community.

Parents are also introducing their children to glass art and getting to spend quality time together while they do. Some schools and local community centers are even offering classes for kids. It is easy to see the tangible beauty of colored glass when it is transformed into art, but the positive effect that colored glass has on the quality of life of some people is immeasurable.

Spreading the Word through Social Media

For those who have used the hashtags mentioned above on your Twitter and Facebook pages, thank you. If you haven't had the chance yet, search the hashtags #savecoloredglass and #glassheals to see what glass artists around the world have to say. This is the power of social media today.

Glass Jewelry by Tanya Veit

Thousands of glass artists around the world were able to be heard in a matter of minutes by being connected on social media. You can help spread the word about the importance of colored glass by including these hashtags in all of your posts that are related to glass art. As time goes on, these hashtags will fill with pictures and stories from around the world, further showing the importance of colored glass.

Looking Forward to Greater Things

Okay. So in the past few months, things were buzzing along as usual. Then the news of the glass manufacturers being severely limited by new government regulations shook up the community. Now an agreement has been reached, however, to allow the manufacturers to slowly get back to business. Those are some serious ups and downs in a niche industry that is comprised of so many small businesses and solo artists.

In light of these events, I think it is important to pause for a moment, collect your thoughts, and take a look at the business plan you had in place for this year. By no means should you be tearing it up and looking to start over based on the happenings of the past few months. Make sure, however, that everything is still possible with the materials currently available to you. Chances are you may need to substitute one technique for another if you can't currently get a color of glass you need, but don't let that derail the momentum you have built over the past months and years. Artists are resilient and resourceful, and they can adapt to situations better than most.

It is great to see artists coming into our studio with a positive attitude and a willingness to try something new. It is forcing many of us to get out of our comfort zones, and you know what happens when artists get out of their comfort zones . . . amazing things!

This is a time in glass art history that will be talked about forever. Even with so much uncertainty, there lies so much opportunity. While everything may not be the same, in the end everything will be okay. GA

Mark Veit currently owns and operates www.aaeglass.com along with partners Tanya and John Veit. They create enamel waterslide decals for glass artists and sell them on their website along with unique silver settings for glass. They also wholesale their fused glass jewelry to galleries and boutiques.

Constantly attending workshops, seminars, and classes with master artisans helps Veit and his partners evolve their work and makes it possible for them to offer glass and jewelry artists a unique medium to maximize their sales. Visit www.aaeglass.com or e-mail info@aaeglass.com for more information.

How to Use The 2016–2017 DIRECTORY of INDUSTRY SUPPLIES

Keep this Directory handy! Our 2016–2017 DIRECTORY OF INDUSTRY SUPPLIES is dedicated to making the buying and selling process between artists/retailers and suppliers mutually beneficial by providing glass artists with new sources of supplies and suppliers with new prospects and customers. We urge you to consider this your source for virtually everything you need to operate your business. The companies listed in the Directory are in business to serve you. Give them an opportunity to prove how good they are.

The 2016–2017 DIRECTORY OF INDUSTRY SUPPLIES consists of two sections:

COMPANY LISTINGS..... 25

These comprehensive, alphabetical listings provide address, phone number, toll-free (800) number, fax number, Web address, e-mail, contact person, products or services available, product trade names, and brief comments for each glass art supplier. Some suppliers chose not to have all the information printed. Each listing includes all of the pertinent data submitted by the supplier.

PRODUCTS AND SERVICES..... 32

The products and services are listed alphabetically by state, and as an extra convenience, the suppliers of these products and services are listed alphabetically by state. For example, if you live in California and would like to purchase pliers, simply find the category titled “Pliers” and look for California suppliers who carry them. Some categories are divided into subheadings, so you can quickly and accurately pinpoint the listing you need. Refer to the company listings section for detailed information on each supplier.

PRODUCTS OR SERVICES:

We manufacture electric kilns of all sizes with interior dimensions ranging from 6 x 6 to 74 x 50 x 13 inches. We offer many enhancements to customize your kiln such as built-in or handheld units as well as the new Swing View Option for Ramp Master and Set-Pro controllers. Handheld and Swing View units can either be installed directly at the factory or supplied as a retro-fit kit for kilns currently in the field. The Ramp Master has the ability to run the most complex of firing schedules with features such as Power Tame, which allows for a percentage control of lid elements without the use of separate infinite switches. The Set-Pro is equally valuable as a controller with On-the-Fly features to give you total control of your firing. Other options for customizing your kiln are digital and analog pyrometers, large 2 x 4-inch viewing window, vent holes, Orton Vent Master for single or multi kiln use, and the Kiln Integrated Software System that allows you to program, monitor, collect firing data, and start/stop.

BRIEF ADDITIONAL COMMENTS:

Evenheat Kiln, Inc. has over 60 years of experience in providing top-of-the-line kiln products and superior customer service to domestic and global markets.

PRODUCT TRADE NAMES:

Ramp Master®, Ramp Master II®, Set-Pro, Rapid Fire, Hot Box, Hot Shot, Jewel Box, Studio 8, Studio Pro and Dyna-Lift. Up to 10 RampMaster II equipped kilns directly from your personal computer. We also custom-make RampMaster II and Set-Pro Wallmount controllers that allow you to convert any manually operated kiln to automatic. In addition we carry a full line of kiln accessories and replacement parts such as full shelves, half shelves, posts, glass separator, haik brushes, hot gloves, and all kiln components. The most recent addition to the kiln line is the Dyna-Lift. The Dyna-Lift makes lifting the heaviest of lids a breeze, all while not putting any stress on the body. The Dyna-Lift is easy to install on your older Evenheats as well as your new one.

McMow Art Glass

Reinvigorating an Intergenerational
Legacy Business
Using a Millennial's
Perspective

by Colleen Bryan

Taylor Materio and her two siblings were all raised and learned their work ethic in art glass retail, but this member of the millennial generation never really thought of making a career of the family business until the last recession hit South Florida. “Both of my parents, Shanon and Phil Materio, worked in the store since they started the business 40 years ago. My two siblings and I worked jobs here until we went to school. I started learning stained glass at age 8 and torchworking at age 10. I took classes from all of the visiting artists my parents brought in. Still, this is not what I thought I would do when I grew up.”

Materio was an anthropology major at the University of Florida. After graduating, she moved to Washington, D.C., and began her career in nonprofit communications, where she worked for six years. “I loved it. But I moved home in 2011 to get married and started spending days back at McMow’s to see what I could help my folks with.”

Materio had just picked up communications and advertising when the recession hit hard. “It was a real smack in the face for South Florida. Seeing that the bulk of our work was custom work, especially front entryways and transoms in homes, when the housing market here took a hit, McMow did as well.”

Materio was in a position to observe the struggle developing about which bills to pay first and when and what the store’s future would be. This was a new experience. “Things had changed so quickly that it caught my parents off guard. They weren’t really focused in their response at the time. I started going over the financials, comparing expenses and profit per job to five years prior. It soon became clear that we couldn’t just hunker down and weather the storm, but would need to make some real shifts if the business was to survive.”

Materio held a mass communication minor in college and a focus on social media marketing, but she quickly identified the key advantage that McMow would have in the challenge. “Nobody would know this business better than our family.” Materio engaged the family and staff in brainstorming to identify places where the store could trim and new markets it could tap into, both in retail and custom work.

Refocusing Custom Work

"We first brainstormed new custom markets that could help us survive without our bread-and-butter residential entryways." She looked at hotels, commercial spaces, and the yachting industry, which continued to grow full speed ahead in South Florida throughout the recession.

"We reached out to churches, temples, and synagogues, many of which had needs for stained glass but lacked expertise in fundraising. We helped them put together donor programs to underwrite new or refurbished windows and started to focus our energy in our marketing and outreach."

Rethinking Retail and Glass Classes

Materio also looked at what was trending in glass industry retail and expanded the store's supply of kiln forming, slumping, and fusing materials. "Our demographic for retail was missing the 18- to 34-year-olds, which can be a really hot market for glass. Because I am a member of that demographic, it was easier for me to see what changes might help to draw them in." Classes where groups of friends go to drink wine and paint a painting were booming in the region, so McMow reached out to people who enjoyed those activities using Groupon and Living Social.

"Groupon was our first foray. There had been no social media before I came to McMow. It took a lot of convincing for my parents to go with Groupon, because the pricing is so deeply discounted. We began to look at the loss leader class as marketing and started running deals." The store has now been through 15 cycles with Groupon and Living Social.

Over time, McMow adjusted offerings and pricing to bring more people in the door and reflect learning about what will draw customers to return. "At first, we had quite a few multiday sessions. We found those less saleable than two-hour sessions, where the customer can make something cool and take it home." They learned to use each session to promote the next offering a customer could attend.

Some Groupon deals, they found, sell better at different times of the day. "The 18- to 34-year-olds want to do things after work, and they are looking for a fun way to spend an evening." Just changing when they ran the classes had an immediate effect. McMow's ramped up its evening classes advertised for friends and date nights. "We stayed open an additional evening just for our Groupon classes."

Price points changed following Materio's analysis as well. "We might run a $300 class for half price and consider it a great deal. But we found that we need to keep the cost under $100 to attract people who've never done glass before. That level makes it within range of the cost of a night out. Whenever we exceeded $100, it became a harder sell."

In short, McMow reshaped its class schedule, structure, and curriculum. "We revised what we were teaching, the setup time, materials used, and the number of firings that went into a class to make them more cost-effective to run. Additionally, we scheduled classes more frequently and in the more saleable time slots of evenings and weekends."

Concurrent with offering Groupon and the social media outreach, McMow revamped its classroom space, painted, redesigned, restyled, and cleaned up everything to achieve a stylistic, sharp look. “We only had one shot. People coming into the store have to love being in this space, love the teacher, love what they make during the time they are here. We got a lot of customer feedback and listened to it, even shifting how we guide people through the check-in.”

In the process, Materio realized that this was what she wanted to do as her life’s work — to reinvigorate the legacy of her family’s business for another 40 years. She came into the store full time and took on a leadership role managing both retail and custom departments.

Markets within Markets

In analyzing local markets for custom work, retail, and classes, Materio found it important to recognize the smaller markets that nest inside the local region and to reach out differentially to each. Palm Beach, for example, is the playground of the rich and famous. It has a massive influx of snowbirds during the winter and is comparatively dead through the summer. Its occupants tend to come from big money that goes back through generations of people who have suffered less than their neighbors during the recession. This area provides a market for restoration work, private homes, and yachts, but it had been extremely seasonal.

“On the custom side of our business, we started to offer summer rates to snowbirds. We marketed the idea that they could have work done while they were gone for the summer, and they could show up for the season in October to find everything completed and beautiful.”

Not every 18- to 34-year-old lives in Palm Beach. Across the bridge, West Palm Beach is home to a younger demographic and the working class. Materio led McMow in expanding offerings to these customers through summer retail classes. They reached out to high school and college students who wanted to do something fun in the summer.

“We began offering student programs that brought in retail income during the summer when custom jobs were lighter. Our advertising budget wasn’t what it had been five years previous, so we had to create the same buzz with fewer dollars.” Materio initiated a blog plus the use of Facebook and Instagram to supplement free e-mail marketing through Mail Chimp.

In promoting the business in general with fewer dollars, Materio started to network more energetically with the local art community. McMow hosted mini-events and invited designers and architects. Every designer must maintain a specific number of continuing education credits to assert its affiliation with their industry council. The store sought Interior Design Continuing Education Council (IDCEC) accreditation for a set of McMow programs and started offering “Breakfast-and-Learn” sessions for IDCEC credit.

“We served breakfast and taught them about working with stained glass, impact ratings, special tints on new units of glass, and such. The offering was promoted through e-mails to the design firms, and the classes are very popular. Designers enjoy coming into a cool artistic space and getting ideas for using glass in creative ways as a backsplash behind bars, in bathrooms and kitchens, and other architectural applications.”

Concurrently, the glass retailer made a special push to hotels and commercial industry. McMow approached local sites that were looking for artistic interior upgrades and started going after those jobs as well.

Handling the Intergenerational Shift

Many families have found that the ideal of transferring leadership in legacy businesses between generations is easier said than done. McMow, however, benefited from both generations being open to change, respectful of the other’s investment in the business, and strangely, from the imperative to change provided by the deep recession.

One factor gave Materio herself confidence in the changes she proposed. “I am 31. The people who are coming up in the art glass industry moving forward are my peers. If I looked at any aspect of our business and my instinct was, ‘No, no, no, NO! We need to change that,’ I felt more certain that my ideas would resonate with the age of the cohort we were trying to attract.”

Still, she did not attempt to wrest control of the steering. “For every one of these changes, I would take the proposal to my parents and say, ‘This is what I’d like to do and why.’ They were supportive of letting me take the studio in a direction they might not even fully understand. My parents are vibrant and full of energy, but as they have grown so have their personal passions. They were willing to have me invest my passion in the company and take a lead. We all worked together to keep the business going, bring in every dollar we could, and do things in a cost-effective way.”

Roles at McMow shifted in this metamorphosis. Shanon Materio was named Florida Retailer of the Year by the Florida Retail Federation in 2013. Four years ago, however, she was elected a West Palm Beach city commissioner, which now takes up most of her time. Her husband, Phil, works full time at the store as vice president, managing projects and teaching classes, and her son Phillip Joseph is the purchasing manager.

“Everything is very hands on and team oriented. My godmother is our designer. Many of our incredible staff have been with us forever.” Taylor Materio is full time now, having moved into the role of executive decision maker and creative director, a position from which she is proud to be guiding the future of McMow Art Glass.

What Recovery Looks Like

The past two years have brought South Florida's economy full circle, and housing prices are back to all-time highs. McMow, too, has regained its feet. "We have 10,000 square feet in the studio and now teach every single week. McMow employs 15 full-time personnel and contracts with five part-time teachers.

McMow teaches all of the major glass techniques except for glassblowing on site, and partners with a local nonprofit, Benzaiten Center for Creative Arts, to do joint classes with their full-time glassblowers. They host joint tours of both facilities. "We sponsor events together with Benzaiten that are geared toward promoting and reinvigorating the glass arts in this area. Our shared goal is to be a glass destination in South Florida."

McMow puts equal effort into retail and custom lines of business and currently estimates that revenues stem 60 percent from custom work and 40 percent from retail and classes. At present, most of their custom work is for residential and commercial spaces, with Art in Public Places (AIPP) emerging as a significant new source of revenue.

Further, Materio notes: "It is important to us to continue to do religious spaces, whether contemporary or traditional design styles. We have one or two projects for sacred spaces in-house each year.

"We lasted through the tough times because of the changes we put in place. Now we are better prepared for the next time the bottom falls out of the market, because we understand that it is a cycle." In the meanwhile, McMow is enjoying the sunshine.

PERSPECTIVES OF GRAAL GLASS

A SYMPOSIUM AND MASTER CLASSES AT BILD-WERK FRAUENAU

by Bild-Werk Frauenau, Germany/Bavaria

In 1916, using the term Graal, the master glassblower Knut Bergqvist and designer-artist Simon Gate of Orrefors Glassworks in Sweden took up old techniques of interlayer decoration. Colored and relief motifs were enclosed between two layers of glass by combining cold decorating techniques with hot furnace work. Originally springing from glass engraving, cutting, and etching, the Graal technique opened endless creative possibilities between the glass furnaces and the art and design studios. Bild-Werk Frauenau will take the 100th anniversary of this discovery as an occasion to investigate the history and perspectives of interlayer techniques in a symposium from October 30 through November 5, 2016.

In Frauenau, the cultural heritage of glasswork and the innovative creativity of the International Studio Glass movement will be meeting on a crossing point of potential and perspectives in glass. Two significant characteristics of Graal glass create the frame for this symposium—the fact that Graal brings together the diversity of glassblowing processes and that it shows the collaboration of artists and glassblowers from the design and glass industries. Bild-Werk Frauenau invites glassmakers, students, glass experts, manufacturers, and stakeholders in education and regional development of glass art to take part in this exchange. The International Summer Academy Bild-Werk Frauenau has always been active at the point of intersection between glass art, glass craft, and glass industry. This “Graal Symposium” continues that initiative.

Opening Colloquium

On October 30 during a one-day colloquium, international glass historians and experts will pursue Graal glass and its variants to discuss the interface of design, glass art, industry, and craft. The related creative ways developed in Sweden, Scandinavia, Great Britain, and the Czech Republic in the crossover of glass techniques and the interface of art, design, crafts, and industry will also be explored. Expert lecturers from art history who will follow the inspirations of Graal glass include:

- Gunnel Holmer (Swedish Glass Museum, Sweden)
- Charles R. Hajdamach (formerly Broadfield House Glass Museum, Great Britain)
- Milan Hlaves (Museum of Decorative Arts Prague, Czech Republic)
- Yann Grienberger (International Glass Centre Meisenthal, France), and
- Katharina Eisch-Angus (University of Graz, Austria).

In addition, current examples of collaboration experiences of Czech, French, and Frauenau initiatives between art and the glass industry through cultural heritage and studio glass will be examined in a discussion of future opportunities for these connections. The podium discussion will pick up on these questions in the context of the East Bavarian “glass crisis.”

Master Classes

Advanced and professional artists, designers, and those involved in the glass crafts are invited to participate in the six master classes conducted from October 31 through November 5 to explore experimental works in engraving, painting, silk screen, cutting, pâte de verre, and flameworking, which will then be blown in the Graal technique. All courses will be lead by experienced glass artists, including:

- Christian Schmidt (glass engraving, Germany)
- Vic Bamforth (glass painting, Great Britain)
- Sue Woolhouse (silk-screening on glass, Great Britain)
- Franz Xaver Höller (cold working, Germany)
- Anne Petters (pâte de verre, Germany), and
- Shane Fero (lampworking, United States).

Graal is understood as a technique of interlayer decoration. In the six workshops, participants will work artistically on appropriate blanks, which will be reheated in the hot shop. Two teams of experienced master glassblowers will then overcast them with clear glass and blow them into their final vase form on the blowpipe. In order to make maximum use of the course time, each course offers additional teaching beyond the realization of the Graal pieces.

Visit www.bild-werk-graalsymposium.de for more information on the symposium and classes. A downloadable version of the printed program is also available on the website.

Listening to Art

The Palau de la Música Catalana

The 2,200-seat concert hall of the Palau de la Música Catalana.

by Leslie Gibbs

Photography by Lorenzo di Nozzi

The Northeast corner of Spain, known as Catalonia, is a relatively small area in size, but it looms large in the worlds of art and architecture. The region contains some 2,000 buildings erected during the Romanesque period, which flourished from around AD 1000 to 1250. These early structures featured thick stone walls and ornamental arches and were primarily churches and monasteries. Numerous Roman temples, castles, and bridges were also erected, and many glorious examples still stand today, making this region a superb place to explore. But to me, the city of Barcelona is the ultimate in architectural wonders. It is the city that endlessly tempts me to return.

Exploring the Magnificence of Barcelona

The turn of the 20th century generated the modernist or art nouveau period and the blossoming of the port city of Barcelona. This prolific era produced a wealth of creative talents—painters Pablo Picasso, Joan Miró, and Salvador Dali and architects Antoni Gaudí, Josep Puig i Cadafalch, and Lluís Domènech i Montaner—along with scores of writers and musicians who were influenced by and contributed to the renaissance of this wonderful city on the Mediterranean Sea.

It is no secret that Barcelona is home to many magnificent structures. Creative masters of architecture such as Gaudí, Domènech, Puig and others, crafted several architectural gems that still fascinate us today, drawing thousands of appreciative sightseers. The Basilica de la Sagrada Família, with its spires that resemble sand dripped castle peaks, and Park Güell, a candy land of mosaic with magic at every twist and turn, along with Casa Batlló, Casa Milà, and Palau Güell are only a few of the many unique structures that have captivated visitors for generations. But it is the stunning Palau de la Música that mesmerized us on our last trip to Barcelona.

Brilliant Architecture

The Palau de la Música Catalana, or Palace of Music, is anything but your ordinary concert hall. Built between 1905 and 1908 by Domènech, it is a brilliant piece of architectural eye candy, in both the exterior and interior. The rich, decorative style is a riot of ornamental, curving, dynamic shapes. Nothing comes standard, and flights of fancy are displayed on every wall and window. Although surrounded by narrow streets and blocks of rather boring nearby buildings, the architect managed to create a sensual building full of light and color.

The façade of the Palau is an amazing sight, adorned with 14 Corinthian columns covered in colorful mosaic tiles. Each pillar features a unique floral motif so detailed that it resembles rolled up carpets of vivid patterns. Centered between and above the pillars, busts of Wagner, Bach, Beethoven, and Palestrina surround the second floor and gaze down upon the visitors.

Sightseers crane their necks to absorb the lush detail that surrounds the exterior walls, but the real icing on the cake is The Catalan Folk Song, the work of sculptor Miguel Blays. This amazing sculpture is actually a group of several entwined figures including a representation of St. George, since it was on his saint's day in 1905 that the first stone was laid. A statue at the very top of the sculpture features a young woman in armor, holding a flag and gazing out at the horizon as if she has completed a great journey of discovery. Visitors realize that they are, in fact, on a great journey before even entering the building, since the exterior with its arches, carved pillars, glass and ceramic scenes, and glorious sculptures promises to be much more than architectural gift wrapping.

Magic and Elegance

Upon entering the elegant vestibule of the Palau, visitors realize that the magic has just begun. Soft light flows into the foyer from stained glass windows and reflects upon mosaic tiles of butter yellow and blue that cover the walls and ceiling. Golden glass and carved stone lampposts topped with domes of leaded glass flank either side of the first three steps that take concert goers to the upper floors. It was a bit difficult to ascend the main stairway, because there is just so much art to absorb. The walls, balustrades, windows, and ceiling are a wedding cake of decorative elements that are gilded, carved, sculpted, and leaded. Every surface appears to be a fanciful and beautiful piece of artwork. I felt as if I were in a kaleidoscope of elegant tableaux. With each step, the spectacle shifted into an even more amazing scene.

Mesmerized by the details of the stairway, it is easy to forget that this building was built in which to hold performances—that is until you find yourself in what has to be one of the most beautiful concert halls in the world. The hall seats around 2,200 people and is drenched in light and color that surround the audience, while a complex fantasy of decoration using every style of the applied arts nearly overwhelms the senses.

Detail of the center of the concert hall skylight.

The stained glass skylight in the concert hall of the Palau de la Música Catalana.

Floor-to-ceiling leaded glass windows in art nouveau style wrap the seating area in shades of lilac and aqua. The concert hall is the only auditorium in Europe illuminated during daylight hours entirely by natural light. The ceiling is lit softly in the evening by arched columns with floral motifs supporting sprays of lights resembling lamp shades in the shape of giant lotus flowers. But the most mind-boggling adornment in the hall, especially for those of us involved in the glass arts, is the enormous skylight that is just breathtaking! The center of the skylight is an inverted dome resembling a giant droplet of ravishing colors falling from the ceiling. This fabulous work of stained glass artistry and structure illuminates the hall during daylight with fiery red and orange stained glass. The dome is surrounded by a leaded glass sun with golden rays that reach out to a choir of 40 female faces placed in jeweled rows around the sun.

A Stage Enclosed with Amazing Beauty

The stage seems almost secondary to the astonishing ornamentations of the seating area. However, this jewel box reveals even more treasures as we turn our attention to that part of the concert hall for which it was built. Two sculptural groupings rising three levels to the ceiling border the stage. On one side is an enormous tree in full summer bloom. At its lower edge is a bust of José Anselmo Clavé i Camps, beneath which sculpted children play alongside a fountain. The other side of the stage entrance supports a procession of Valkyries sprinting across the arched opening on their galloping horses. A bust of Beethoven is positioned elegantly beneath this forceful panorama.

The stage itself is enclosed with a wall of amazing beauty. Eighteen musical muses are arranged amid brick-colored trencadis mosaics. Each of these goddesses is sculpted in a combination of stone and ceramic mosaic linked to one another by a mosaic garland.

The muses are all distinctive in attitude. Each one plays a different instrument and wears unique garments and headdresses reflecting various styles of dress from several eras. These amazing figures, the work of sculptor Eusebi Arnau and ceramic mosaicist Lluís Brú i Salalles, give the stage the feeling of an oasis of color and grandeur.

Lush Sights and Sounds

If you are lucky enough to attend a concert in this magnificent hall, then you have experienced a moment of unparalleled rapture! More than half a million people a year attend musical performances in the Palau that range from symphonic and chamber music to jazz and Canco (Catalan songs). Entertainers from all over the world perform here, and we were impressed to find, nestled among the variety of musical performances in the upcoming programs, Carlos Santana. (Oh, what a show that would be!)

Even for us astounded visitors, the Palau de la Música lived up to its name. While we sat in decadent splendor in the concert hall, we were treated to a short but thrilling musical interlude demonstrating the hall's acoustic perfection that accompanies its artistic richness.

Lluís Millet Hall and the Petit Palau

A simpler but no less lovely section of the main floor is a two-story-high area called the Lluís Millet Hall after the founder of the Orfeó Català. From this hall, surrounded by large stained glass windows in a flower patterned motif, there is a clear view of the striking columns outside the building that are on the balcony of the façade. These 14 columns, all decorated in mosaics featuring different floral decorations, are even more stunning when viewed up close. There is also a smaller music hall that was constructed in this area during the first extension and reform during the 1980s. This modern hall serves as a more intimate venue for chamber music.

In addition to Lluís Millet Hall, the Petit Palau, which opened in 2004, is an auditorium constructed 36 feet beneath the square, which once held a church. The Petit Palau was designed to be a versatile space that could be used to hold cultural and social activities. It is more modern in style, but it still reflects the treatment of light and warmth of the original concert hall.

With its rich decoration and showers of light from leaded glass, the Palau is a monument to fabulous ornamentation and structural elements demonstrating what can be produced when artists and craftspeople are given creative freedom. If beauty is good for the soul, then the Palau is truly a domestic treasure that envelopes you in its gentle spell.

SAMA Leaves a Mosaic Legacy in El Cajon

by Shawn Newton

The Mosaic Marathon is an integral part of the annual conference of the Society of American Mosaic Artists (SAMA). The event, which was co-sponsored by Laticrete, Smalti.com, and Wits End Mosaic, brought together our members for an opportunity to create a lasting, large-scale mosaic. The finished piece is donated to a local charity or needy establishment in our host conference city. This year it was in San Diego, California.

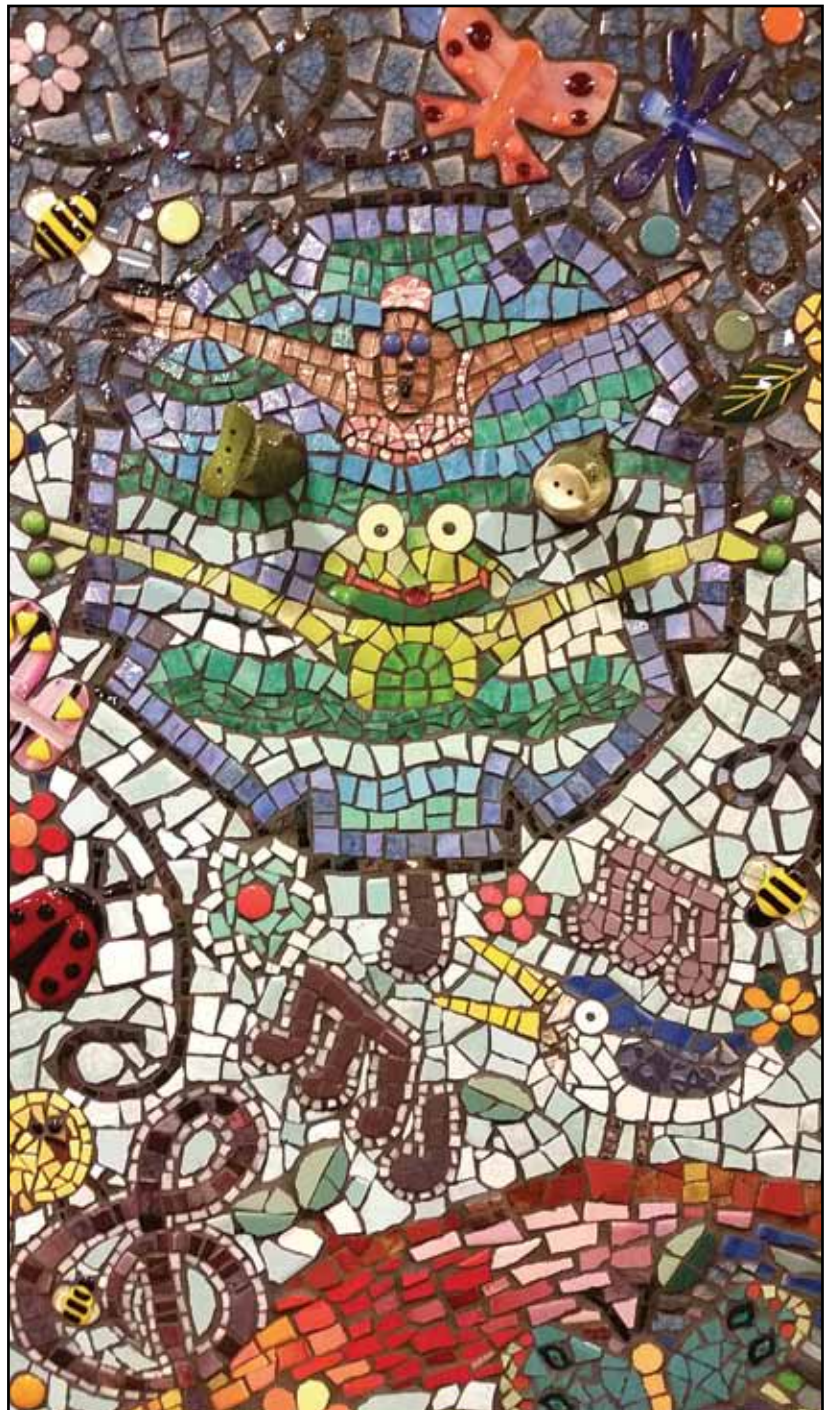

As a nonprofit organization, this is an opportunity for SAMA members to give back to the art community and create a lasting reminder of the legacy of the organization and its mission. The 2016 recipient of the Mosaic Marathon project is the St. Madeleine Sophie's Center (SMSC) in El Cajon, California. The center combines a culture of care and creativity within quality programs to provide liberal arts education, practical skills development, employment, and dignity in order to educate and empower people with developmental disabilities.

Creating an Inspiring Entrance

Dawn Mendelson and Jolino Beserra served as lead artists for the Mosaic Marathon. Mendelson, a Southern California artist, has led many large and small community projects from fine art to murals. She also serves as program director for Piece by Piece, a non-profit organization that brings mosaic art to underserved neighborhoods in the Los Angeles area. A California native, Beserra creates architectural mosaics for large public and residential installations.

Mendelson described the project. "Our design focused on the programs offered at SMSC in a colorful and inspiring mural that surrounded the entrance to the building. This is the door everyone enters, and we wanted to help make that portal to their center joyful. Because both Jolino and I specialize in pique assiette mosaic, we decided to use a variety of materials, including broken plates, 3-D figurines, ceramic tile, and Mexican smalti, which was generously donated by Wit's End Mosaic. For me, the excitement is often in choosing the materials and envisioning how to interpret their textures and colors into a design."

Three mosaic panels now surround the main entry to the center. Rendered in a tapestry motif, they include references to their aquatic and arts programs, as well as popular garden activities. They also provide a nod to the culinary arts, the new vineyard, and the drama and music programs. The overall comprehensive design reflects the playful and creative expressions found in SMSC artists' work. To honor and acknowledge the center's 50 years of service, their own artists created 50 fused glass elements as well as mosaic flowers to be included in the mural.

The Value of Sharing Creativity and Passion

Mendelson sums it up: "The most valuable experience in both leading and participating in the Mosaic Marathon at SAMA is the creating of community, the exchange of ideas and techniques, and the feeling of support and camaraderie. There is collaboration and teamwork, new friendships are forged, and old ones are rekindled. There is laughter and chatter, as well as deep discussions and moments of intense concentration and quiet. And there is giving back.

"As artists, two of our most valuable assets are our creativity and our passion. Sharing this with others who may not have that experience or who could use the support is incredibly important. I love that the mission of the SAMA Mosaic Marathon is not only to leave a legacy of our art form in the city to which we've come, but also to contribute to that local community in a way that lifts people's spirits and reminds them of the power of art."

The entrance to this building serves as the entry to many of these participants' days and lives. SAMA hopes it has given them a joyful vision that reflects the very nature of their creative and generous selves.

Readers' Forum

Dear Glass Art,

I would like to commend the magazine for presenting a variety of articles that speak to glass artists using different techniques. The January/February 2016 issue included an article, "Finishing Strong," by Stan Price that I found to be extremely useful and informative. As an artist, I am always looking for ways to use materials and techniques to translate my ideas into glass.

I always consider lighting and display devices, often just seeking out something different to hold the glass without much consideration of its relationship to the work. After reading the article and looking at the illustrations, I am inspired to consider display as the continuous dialogue of the glass piece—the completed package. Using the knowledge and skills of a woodworker or metalsmith, or incorporating found objects as part of the display will provide new ideas and presentation opportunities.

Sincerely,
Deborah Ellington

In the July/August 2016 issue of Glass Art, the name of artist Indra McCraw was inadvertently given as Indra McGraw in the Peter McGrain Skills and Techniques article. We apologize to the artist for this error.

Glass Art would like to extend a sincere thank-you to our readers who take the time to let us know how we are doing. You can share your opinions by contacting us via postal mail, e-mail, or phone.

Fused Quilts

Quilts tell our stories, reflect the nature of our communities, and pass our family histories on to future generations. The art of quilting has a long tradition in nearly every culture.

Northwest glass artist Susan Murphy brings together a passion for glass fusing and a love of whimsical design in her new series of fused glass quilts. The colors, patterns, and intricate nature of quilt designs allow for unlimited creative possibilities and provide the perfect vehicle for our stories to be told in glass. Original design by Kaffe Fassett

At Northwest Art Glass, we can help you tell your story and create your own traditions.

A detailed stained glass artwork featuring a dense arrangement of flowers and leaves. The flowers are primarily in shades of yellow, orange, and red, with green leaves interspersed. The design is set against a background of black and white geometric patterns, creating a complex and visually rich composition.
